Emily graduated from Fordham University in 2018, with a bachelor's degree in History, and minors in Economics and Psychology. She attended Benjamin N. Cardozo School of Law, graduating in 2021.

During law school, Emily interned for the Better Business Bureau under their Direct Selling Self-Regulatory Council and applied FTC standards for advertising when evaluating companies' earning and product claims. Additionally, she gained experience working on intellectual property matters by interning for a luxury fashion house and solo practitioner. Subsequently, she interned for a criminal law attorney, where she researched various issues for clients and assisted in drafting motions.

Prior to joining Marks O'Neill, Emily worked as an attorney at a boutique law firm where she handled a variety of transactional and litigation matters and focused her practice on employment and intellectual property law.

At Marks O'Neill, Emily brings her experience to the Casualty, Healthcare, Professional Liability, Construction and Transportation practice groups.

When not in the office, Emily enjoys reading, jogging, and going to concerts.
